Commentary on business, the economy and innovative practices

We had over 70 people sign up for John Jantsch’s latest session on social media. John is a classic example of how a one-person business (DuctTape Marketing) can leverage the power of the Internet and social media to create a small empire. John’s sources of revenue include consulting, seminars, books, training, coaching, workshops, CD’s and Podcasts.

This was the fourth time John has visited Littleton. This time he stressed the need to establish a listening station to detect what people are saying about your company (both good and bad). He also talked about an integrated set of social media that works in tandem to get word out about his company and increases his Google ranking for his web site. A number of Littleton businesses are getting results with their own social media campaigns.
